If you have previous convictions for traffic offences, you should consider obtaining legal advice on whether you will need a lawyer to represent you in court for your application.

If the court refuses your application, you have only 14 days after the date of judgement in which to appeal or seek leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

You should seriously consider obtaining legal advice before lodging any appeal or application for leave permission to appeal as appeals in the Supreme Court can cost many thousands of dollars where an appellant is unsuccessful.

You may be required to pay a court filing fee for this application and any service fees required by the court to arrange service of your application on the Registrar of Motor Vehicles.
