

ALISA BUNBURY VISITING NORFOLK ISLAND IN APRIL

Did you know some of the earliest paintings of Norfolk Island's flora were created by a convict called John Doody in the early 1790s? Or that James Stuart, a surgeon in the 1830s, also dabbled in paints and recorded what Norfolk Island's owl looked like?

If these little facts pique your interest or if you are an art lover who already knew the information - you should definitely join us at Christian's Cave on Tuesday the 5th of April to hear more about the Island's artistic history.

Curator and researcher Alisa Bunbury is visiting the Island and will be delivering her presentation about the early images of Norfolk Island at the following times:

'Getting to the art of it: Early images of Norfolk Island'

Tuesday 5th April Christian's Cave @ 10:30am

Tuesday, 5th April Christian's Cave @ 5.00pm

(Located on Queen Elizabeth Avenue, drive past Hillie's Restaurant cattle grid and drive up Pitcairn Settler's Tour driveway. Parking available.)

The same presentation will be repeated so people have the option of attending before or after work. Both locals and visitors welcome.
