

NORFOLK ISLAND – PACIFIC JEWEL EXHIBITION by KEN DUNCAN

Following the success of his recent documentary with Ray Martin, Ken Duncan is launching an exhibition of new photos from Norfolk Island.

“Visiting Norfolk Island is like stepping back in time to an era that was far simpler”, says Ken. “The island is uncrowded, with a wealth of natural beauty and a fascinating, multi-layered history of seafarers, convicts & mutineers.” And Ken has managed to capture the very essence of this stunning Pacific Jewel.

Ken Duncan and his good mate, Ray Martin, had loads of fun filming the Norfolk Island documentary – the second in their “Chasing the Light” series. As well as being an iconic Australian journalist, Ray is a keen photographer who loves to go adventuring with Ken. The pair come up with unique angles and interesting stories just about everywhere they go. The time they spent together on Norfolk Island was no different.

Their recent Norfolk Island documentary was seen by over 300,000 people when it went to air on SBS. And since then, Ken has had many people asking when they would be able to see photos from that trip. So Ken selected, printed and framed his best images for the Norfolk Island – Pacific Jewel exhibition, which launches on July 2nd.

But Ken knows not everyone will be able to visit his Gallery to see the exhibition. So he is also creating an online virtual gallery where people will be able to view all the new images. You will be able to access Ken’s Virtual Gallery from his website on July 2nd.

If you are able to visit Ken’s Erina Heights Gallery in July, you can book for a weekend screening of the Norfolk Island documentary on the giant screen in his theatre. You can get all the details about sessions times and how to book your tickets at www.kenduncan.com/norfolk-island-pacific-jewel. Places are limited, so book early.

You can meet Ken Duncan during the opening weekend of his Norfolk Island – Pacific Jewel exhibition. You'll find some cool new products created to celebrate Ken's new exhibition. And he is always happy to sign your purchases.

Ken loves so many aspects of Norfolk Island - the idyllic, uncrowded beaches, crystal clear seas, abundant marine life, the island's rich history, and bountiful home grown produce. He was particularly captivated by the rugged coastlines, carved over millennia by wind and waves. And by the genuine friendliness of the islanders who work so well together and warmly welcome the tourists who bring income to their Pacific paradise. All of that shines through in Ken's spectacular photos, and in the Norfolk Island documentary.

If you have never visited Norfolk Island, Ken's new exhibition will be a wonderful introduction for you. And for those who have, it may well be a walk down memory lane. But whether you are a Norfolk Island resident or a stranger to this Pacific Jewel, Ken's images will delight you and give you an insight into the island that not everyone gets to see. People often ask Ken what his favourite print is, and he usually says, "The next one." But one of the shots he took on Norfolk Island is definitely his new favourite. It's a shot called The Pulpit. I hope you take the opportunity to see it in print in Ken's Gallery, or online in his virtual gallery, during this exciting new exhibition.
